About the Developer

Andrew Mitchell is a fantasy writer and self-taught software developer based in Austin, Texas. He built AYCM Manuscript for the same reason most great tools get built — out of pure frustration.

Like many serious writers, Andrew found himself juggling five separate apps just to manage the different pieces of his story — characters in one place, outlines in another, research somewhere else entirely. Nothing talked to each other. Nothing was built with the complexity of a full novel in mind. So he decided to build it himself.

What followed was nearly a decade of work. Andrew spent the first years not writing code, but thinking deeply about design — mapping out how a true writing ecosystem should actually work, how the pieces of a story connect, and what a writer actually needs to finish a book. Only then did he teach himself Swift and SwiftUI to bring that vision to life.

AYCM Manuscript is the result — a platform where every character, scene, chapter, and story element lives in one connected ecosystem, the way a novel actually works in a writer's mind.

Andrew built AYCM alongside his wife and business partner Andrea, who has been part of the project from the ground up. The company name itself — AYCM, short for Andrea, You Complete Me — is a dedication to her.
